On Thursday, the U.S. Supreme Court announced it would be taking up a case that could impose “right-to-work” on the entire public sector – the culmination of decades of attacks on working people by corporate CEOs, the wealthiest 1% and the politicians that do their bidding to rig the economy in their favor.

Twice in the last three years, the U.S. Supreme Court has been asked – and declined – to answer the fundamental question of whether the fair share fees that support strong public sector collective bargaining are constitutional. In the 2014 Harris v. Quinn case, the Court sidestepped the question and in last year’s Friedrichs v. California Teachers Association (CTA) case, the then eight Justice court deadlocked on the question leaving it unanswered.

Today, the Supreme Court took the Janus v. AFSCME case to answer the question once and for all. Specifically, the Court will decide this term if Abood v. Detroit Board of Education, the 1977 case that established the foundational precedent for fair share fees, should be overruled.

The goal of the corporate interests who are bankrolling Janus is no secret. While the petitioner, like his predecessors in Harris and Friedrichs, argues that the First Amendment prohibits fair share fees, the supporters of these challenges are only concerned with taking out the strong voice for working people and economic opportunity for all that public sector unions provide.

This assault comes at a time when unions are more important than ever. Unions provide a path to the middle class for working people – especially at a time when big corporations and the wealthiest individuals in the nation are rigging the economic rules in their favor, knocking American families and the entire U.S. economy off-balance. When union membership is high, entire communities enjoy wages that represent a fair return on their work and greater social and economic mobility.

And Americans know it. New Gallup research shows that more than 3 in 5 Americans have a favorable view of unions – the highest level in nearly 15 years. Support is even stronger among young people.

“For decades corporate CEO’s and the wealthy have fought to enrich themselves at the expense of the rights and pocket books of working people, and that harms families in communities across the country,” said National Education President Lily Eskelsen García. “As the nation’s largest union, this fight not only hurts our members, but also the families of the children we educate.”

The Agenda Behind the Case

In 2018, the Supreme Court will decide if ‘Abood v. Detroit Board of Education,’ the 1977 case that established the foundational precedent for fair share fees, should be overruled.

The Janus case challenges a public sector union’s ability to collect “fair share” or “agency” fees from employees – reduced amounts charged to workers who opt out of union membership, yet continue to receive the union representation and bargaining services that benefit all employees and which unions are required to provide.

A ruling by the Court to strike down fair share fees would strip bargaining power from workers across the country, undermining the ability of people to come together in strong unions to win better wages, benefits, protections and standards for working families. In effect, the entire public sector becomes “right-to-work” in one fell swoop.

“This case is yet another example of corporate interests using their power and influence to launch a political attack on working people and rig the rules of the economy in their own favor,” said Lee Saunders, president of AFSCME. “When working people are able to join strong unions, they have the strength in numbers they need to fight for the freedoms they deserve.”

Janus is funded by the National Right to Work Foundation and the Liberty Justice Center, the litigation wing of the Illinois Policy Institute. Both groups are part of a network funded by billionaires and corporate CEOs who do not believe that working people deserve the same freedoms they have: to negotiate a fair return on their work.

The blatant political agenda behind these legal challenges was recently scrutinized by The Guardian in an article that highlighted how a right-wing campaign was executing a plan to strike a “mortal blow” and “defund and defang” the nations’ unions:

“The new assault is being spearheaded by the State Policy Network (SPN), an alliance of 66 state-based think tanks, or “ideas factories” as it calls them, with a combined annual budget of $80m. As suggested by its slogan – “State solutions. National impact” – the group outlines an aim to construct a rightwing hegemony throughout the US, working from the bottom up. …To do that, it first has to sweep aside public sector unions.”

Critical to these groups’ efforts is concealing their anti-worker agenda with euphemisms like “rights” and “freedom,” says Jim Miller, a professor of labor studies at San Diego City College. “When you hear talk about from them about the ‘rights of the individual,’ think about the enshrinement of the 1% to a position of unparalleled political power into the unforeseen future,” Miller recently wrote.

“More and more, the economy is working against working people, including the families whose children I teach”, says Sonya Shpilyuk, a high school English teacher in Montgomery County, MD. “My union gives me a voice and a seat at the table to advocate for my students, my colleagues, and my community.”

The Supreme Court is expected to hear arguments in Janus v. AFSCME in January 2018 and decision will be issued in May or June.

On behalf of the Capital Region BOCES Faculty Association’s Executive Board, I would like to extend a heartfelt thank you to all of our School-Related Personnel members. Your hard work and dedication make our school lives so much richer... just by being you, and doing what you do day-in and day-out, you make such a difference, and we thought you should know.

Many Thanks! - Sherry

Happy Hanukah
Dear Constituents:

As we head into our Thanksgiving break, I want to give my thanks to the many people who go above and beyond to insure our students and fellow co-workers are treated with respect and professionalism. You should be recognized for your achievements in the classroom and appreciated for your generosity and nurturing words to our students and staff. BOCES is blessed with many exemplary professionals and I am grateful we have the opportunity to make a difference in so many lives.

There are presently many changes occurring within Capital Region BOCES. Our administration has changed over the past few months and new initiatives are being implemented in Special Education and Career and Tech. The TCIS trainings began over the summer and continue to be offered to our stand alone building. All staff will eventually be trained with the classes with the most challenging behaviors having top priority. There has been some concern from staff who feel they may not be able to pass the physical restraint section of the TCIS training. If you are medically unable to participate, you will need to provide a medical note from your physician. The Association and administration will work with each individual to insure your concerns are addressed.

November is the month in which Teaching Assistants must notify their respective principal as to which evaluation form they have chosen. All un-tenured Teaching Assistants must have a Supervisor Evaluation and tenured TA’s can choose from the Supervisor, Growth Plan or Special Project evaluation. All tenured Teaching Assistant must have a Supervisor evaluation at least once every five years. This process should be meaningful and beneficial to your development as a professional in the teaching field.

I am pleased to announce we are making gains in hiring staff for all the TA/Aide opening we had from the start of this school year. As you know, being short staff causes so many difficulties and challenges within the classroom structure. Since there is a shortage of substitute’s state wide it is essential that classrooms are staff adequately with full time employees to avoid injuries to staff and students and insuring the students are getting quality instruction every day. Research shows that students with 1:1 or small group instruction make greater strides in growth academically. This kind of instruction cannot occur if there is a shortage of staff in a classroom.

In closing, I wish to extend my best wishes for a wonderful Thanksgiving holiday to each of you and your family. Try to think of at least one thing you are grateful for and remember you are appreciated by your co-workers and staff for the phenomenal work you do. I know I appreciate your dedication every day to building healthy relationships with our students. You each make a difference in a child’s life and for this I give you thanks! Enjoy your break with delicious food, good conversations and enjoy making new memories with family and friends. Happy Thanksgiving everyone!

In Solidarity, Colleen Condolora

Teaching Assistant/Aide Report
Colleen Condolora, Chapter VP
Greetings,

It is always heartening to learn of successful BOCES students. A few months back, I transported a friend to the St. Clare’s out-patient clinic for a procedure. In a conversation with the post-surgery nurse, Jennifer J. P., my friend and I learned that Jennifer had been a student in Fran Yankowski’s nursing class at Votec, as it was called back in the 80’s. As we conversed about BOCES, a nurse, who was walking by, heard “BOCES”, and stopped briefly to say that she, Cathy Jo D., had also had been in Fran’s class. As the conversation continued, we learned that Jennifer had met and married a fellow who also had attended BOCES. The student, Ed P., had been in my Stan’s Building Trades class. What a small world. Jennifer and Cathy Jo asked us to remember them to “Mrs. Yankowski”, who was tough but good.

More recently, we learned of another BOCES graduate who is doing well. The student, Todd S. was enrolled in Dick Stigberg’s Auto Mech Class in the 90’s. Todd had successfully pursued a career in his field for many years, but found it was interfering with his hobby; cars. Todd loves to restore, repair, race and paint cars and his hobby was too much like his job. So he changed careers and now works in Building Trades. He has done some much needed repairs and painting in my home. He does nice work, (although I was married to the best.)

Of the 100’s of students who walk through a teacher’s classroom door, it is rare for them to know if or how they have contributed to their student’s future. It is reaffirming to know that some were really paying attention and are using what you taught them.

RETIREE UPDATES

Anita Riccio, Teacher Sp. Ed., has returned from a River Boat Cruise in Europe. Her goal was to visit the countries of her maternal heritage. Among the places visited were Germany, Hungary, Austria, Slovakia, the Czech Republic, Venice, Brussels and the Danube River. Anita threw roses into the Danube where her aunt, the opera singer, had drowned many years ago.

Happy 90th Birthday to Sylvia Goerg, Supervisor. Syl was honored at a party given by Lauren Duffy, Speech Path, on Oct. 21st. Over 20 people were in attendance.

Union sues to stop SUNY charters' fake certification scheme

Saying that the move sells out the state's most vulnerable children "to score political points," NYSUT filed suit this week to stop the SUNY Charter Schools Committee from implementing illegal regulations that would "certify" teachers in some charter schools with just a month of instruction and a week of practice teaching. SED leaders called the plan an insult to the teaching profession. For more information go to the NYSUT website.

Regents approve Next Generation Learning Standards

While there's much more work to be done, NYSUT urges educators and parents to continue meaningful participation in the phase-in of the Next Generation Learning Standards approved this week by the Regents. The commissioner and Regents insist the standards are a work in progress and they invited feedback from the field as implementation is slowly phased in.

Disaster relief requires massive response: Here's how to help.

NYSUT seeks donations to its Disaster Relief Fund to provide needed resources to storm-ravaged Puerto Rico. Members of NYSUT and other unions are among the hundreds who have volunteered to join the recovery efforts. The easiest thing to do is donate, as a union or individually, to NYSUT's Disaster Relief Fund.
